How do we create narratives and memories in the digital age? How do we preserve stories from our under-narrated past? These questions are at the heart of Cultural Mapping and the Digital Sphere: Place and Space, a book of fourteen essays from thirty-one contributors who collectively explore communication technologies and cultural practices of the Canadian past and present.

Proudly sponsored by the Faculty of Arts, the Department of Languages, Literatures and Cultures, the Department of English, the Canada Research Chairs Program, and the University of Alberta Press.
